

Trying to regulate VoIP and creat backdoor ways for police to tap calls is a horrible idea. This will make it possible for hackers to take advantage through exploits or cracking the encryption. If you do regulate VoIP then there is always the possiblity of a new standard arising (much the same way that p2p programs/networks pop up so quickly). This might just be something that can't be regulated.